Monday gave us the fundamentals

Structure and agency. Social facts. Troubles and issues. Social construction. Social order and social change.

Today: three perspectives that ask different questions of the same problem, and the core concepts that explain how a person comes to participate at all.

Today's question

Three sociologists look at the same declining participation. What does each one ask?

What you should be able to do

By the end of today, you should be able to:

- distinguish functionalism, conflict, and symbolic interactionism;
- explain roles and identities as socially constructed;
- explain socialization through agent, target, and context; and
- use community and stratification to say who is served and who is not.

What each one asks

Perspective	View of society	The question it asks
Functionalism	Interdependent institutions, each with a function, maintaining the whole	How do the parts of this system relate and produce this outcome?
Conflict	Structure emerging from competition for resources and power; winners and losers	Who wins, who loses, how did that emerge, and what structures sustain it?
Symbolic interactionism	Meaning built and negotiated through everyday interaction	How do people construct the meaning of this thing through interaction?

Roles and identities

Roles are social positions carrying expectations for behavior. Identity is the meaning a person attaches to themselves based on how they understand and prioritize those roles.

- Most of us expect to occupy the role of "parent." Far fewer occupy "angler," "hunter," "birdwatcher," or "falconer."
- The meanings and expectations of a prominent role are more widely shared than those of an uncommon one.

Socialization

How people learn the beliefs, values, norms, and behaviors of their culture.

Agent, target, context

- Agent — the person or institution doing the socializing.
- Target — the person being socialized.
- Context — the setting in which it happens.

Primary socialization happens through parents in childhood. Secondary socialization happens through peers, teachers, extended family, media, and institutions.

Slide 10

Box 9.2 — what actually predicts participation

National survey data on three variables: gender, rural upbringing, and whether the respondent's father hunted.

- 82% of males with a hunting father had tried hunting — and rural versus urban upbringing made no difference (81% vs. 83%).
- For females with a hunting father, the effect was modest: 27%.
- For females without a hunting father: 6%, with rural upbringing making no difference.

The presence of a hunting agent in the household mattered more than the rural or urban context in which socialization took place.

Slide 11

When does rural upbringing matter?

Exactly one case: males who grew up rural without hunting fathers were far more likely to have tried hunting (59%) than urban males without hunting fathers (34%).

Rural upbringing fosters participation mainly by standing in for absent primary agents — other family, friends, or institutions step in where the behavior is widely seen as normative.

Socialization can also exclude

Carini and Weber examined how angling magazines socialize women into the sport. They found women were:

- underrepresented relative to their actual participation;
- depicted in stereotypical roles;
- usually accompanied by men; and
- overtly sexualized.

When images reinforce a male-centric social space, people may not see themselves as suitable members of the group.

Slide 13

Community
The intermediary space between the individual and broader society.

Slide 14

Three elements of community

- Local territory – a specific physical setting.
- Local society – the structures and institutions that meet local needs.
- Social interaction – active engagement of people with one another.

A community facing an urgent issue can act in ways not predictable from its members' individual attitudes – a local ordinance may be a collective compromise that reflects nobody's average view.

Slide 15

Community-based conservation is not automatic

Locally designed institutions can outperform centralized management. But success depends on context and the robustness of the process.

- Credibility: do short-term local interests override broader goals?
- Capacity: technical expertise, management skill, finances, political access.
- Power: collaboration can be derailed when elite factions hold disproportionate influence.

Without these assets, community-based approaches can reinforce existing inequalities rather than correct them.

Slide 16

Stratification and inequality

Stratification: the processes allocating resources and opportunities by hierarchical ranking or socially agreed criteria. Inequality: the uneven or unfair distribution that results.

- The cost of equipment, transportation, and access can become prohibitive.
- Agencies risk losing large segments of their user base who can no longer afford to participate.
- Public trust thinking holds that wildlife is not owned by any group but held for the public benefit – which makes equity a trust obligation, not a preference.

Slide 17

Pair rehearsal: name the perspective

With a partner, name the perspective behind each claim:

1. "The walk-in program held the access system together; when it shrank, everything downstream failed."
2. "Out-of-state lease clients gained the access that local residents lost."
3. "'Heritage' means something different now than it did when my father said it."

Friday

Read the Week 08 Case Brief: Who Still Hunts Cedar County? before class. Everything you need is in it.

Licenses down 44% in twenty years. County population nearly flat. Farm operations down from 1,290 to 610. Posted acres up from 61,000 to 219,000.
